architecture

From first impressions, Ron Arad seems to greatly be influenced by the nature and appeal of curvilinear elements. When it comes to architecture curves can be difficult to work with but in the end extremely modern and aesthetically pleasing. Curvilinear elements such as arches, bending walls, or extruding roofs show and promote movement and continuation. When these elements are either done in sheet metal, aluminum, or smooth pavement, it provides a nice, clean, and modern look. Arad also is an Industrial Designer.

*"I want to design for the things themselves.
there's no one who I'd love to design for."*

- RON ARAD

MASS SOUND TRANSIT MUSIC FESTIVAL

The posters are about movement and sound, so I chose a "retro" style that incorporates dancing and jumping around. The imagined music festival that was created by combining Sound Transit, Washington state's public transit, with the idea of mass: large crowds, big sound, and the amount of acts playing the venue.

SMALL PRINT, BIG PICTURE

"Small Print, Big Picture" is a calendar that is designed to help keep print alive through the education and spreading of the practice of a more environmentally sound printing. Each month has its own theme and tips on designing with recycling in mind, and how to cut back on waste and pollution.
